Azaleas at Christmas

Azaleas are the stars of winter: when most plants take a break, they come into bloom. For this very reason these small rhododendrons are also fantastically well suited for festive Christmas arrangements. Depending on how they are arranged, they become a red-blossoming christmassy table arrangement, or an ice-white winter fairy tale.

Merry Christmas!

There are azaleas in a whole variety of flower colours. For Christmas the red ones are naturally particularly well suited. With a few accessories a festive table decoration is created: then just simply place the azalea into a red cachepot, carefully add the finishing touches to the plant with pine and fir branches and decorate with pine cones and wooden stars.

Winter fairy tale

Those who like subtler shades can use blossoms in soft pink or clear white. White azaleas look good combined with muehlenbeckia, ivy and ferns. White-coloured pine cones, pebbles and small white Christmas tree baubles also look good with them. Anyone wanting a completely different "Christmas star" for a change can place the white-blossoming azalea in a metallic pot and decorate it with silver metal stars.

Christmas stars

This winter white azaleas are the stars. ▶

All around the azalea muehlenbeckia and jasmine form fluid transitions. ►

Oh Tannenbaum

A standard azalea is a chic companion to the Christmas tree in a colour to match the tree decorations. ▼

Possibly not a replacement for a Christmas tree but, even so, a headturner in warm colours at a cold time of the year. ►

Happy New Year
